SCHOOL-ROOM TIME. - There are generally but two ages in life of perfect loveliness and freshness-that of the young child and of the young woman; and between them the features are stretched and pulled about by the hand of nature with a seeming caprice which forbids any very positive judgement as to the result. But these are the rightful years for such mysterious manipulations, and while they are going on, there is always a hope of change for the better .-There is more chance of the plainest face of this period becoming interesting, than of the thoroughly formed beauty remaining one. The lanky, dingy, oddlooking girl, shall be progressing to a style of beauty which will never decline, while the finished wax doll of fourteen, of whom so much was expected, has long been coarse, pudding faced, or withered. For the one has treasured up her inheritance for the age when she needs it most, and the other squandered it early.

FRENCH TEMPERANCE -It may appear strange that in a country where wine is almost a common beverage, drunkenness is rare, but such appears to be the fact, if we can rely on the statement of Thurlow Weed, editor of the Albany Evening Journal.
